The Tale of Two Counselors

I chose to be a School Counselor because...

I have always loved children and helping others. I take great joy in making a difference in the lives of children. I love building relationships with the children and their families. The fringe benefits of working with children include all of the smiles and hugs I receive from my students. I also take great pleasure in helping children set future college and career goals. Helping make students socially and emotionally well is essential to preparing successful adults in society.

I saw firsthand that my teaching was impeded by things that happened before my students ever set foot on campus. I had to talk to students about life, coping strategies, and let them vent before I could start my lesson. I enjoyed that start to our day and decided that I wanted to transition from School teacher to School counselor. Social emotional learning and academics go hand-in-hand in order for our students to be well adapted citizens of the world.
